Mason Dunne grew up in the Federated Suns, on one of the many estates owned by Victor Steiner-Davion. As his family worked the land, Mason piloted every type of IndustrialMech, from AgroMech to ForestryMech. At the age of sixteen he drove a ForestryMech into the heart of a forest fire to rescue some smokejumpers who had become trapped.

Due to his piloting expertise and apparent lack of fear in the face of danger, he came to the personal attention of Victor, who brought him to the Republic. There, he was given the opportunity to prove his worth in the Republic military and very quickly was inducted into the Knights of the Sphere. Since that time he has been given numerous assignments, all of which he has fulfilled in an exemplary fashion.

It has come to the Order's attention, however, that some of his missions have involved secret elements, not in keeping with the normally open — some would even say naïve — philosophy of the Knights. What this might mean is unclear. Dunne bears watching.

Since the Mad Cat III was sold directly to the Inner Sphere, as the Mad Cat II before it, the Republic has a large number of these well-made designs.

Created by Clan Diamond Shark (which would become Clan Sea Fox) following the success of the Mad Cat II, the Mad Cat III is simply a medium-weight variant of the original heavy Mad Cat; one of the most successful designs ever to walk off a 'Mech assembly line.

This particular design is so new that its only pilot is the current one, Mason Dunne, who is a Knight of the Sphere. He named the design "Ghost."
